

It is abundantly clear that the climate crisis is also a human rights crisis. It concerns the conditions of human life on Earth, and even the preconditions for human life. Mobilizing available resources to prevent some of this foreseeable disastrous human rights impact, is not just a hope or an optional political agenda. It is also matter of human rights obligations. The Strasbourg Principles are a strong instrument that can assist in enforcing those obligations.

Eva Brems

Professor of Human Rights Law, Ghent University

The Strasbourg Principles

of International Environmental Human Rights Law